Odometer disclosure

Odometer miles
Reading date

Federal law (and state law in many states) requires you to state the mileage when you transfer ownership. A false statement may result in fines and/or imprisonment. I, the giver, certify to the best of my knowledge that the odometer reading above is (check one):

☐ The actual mileage of the car ☐ Exceeds mechanical limits ☐ NOT the actual mileage

Gift statement

I, the giver, transfer the car described above to the receiver as a gift. No money, trade, loan payoff, services or anything else of value was paid or promised for it, and the price is $0.00. I own the car and have the right to give it. The car is given as is, with no warranty. The receiver accepts the car and, from the date above, is responsible for its insurance, registration, tickets and tolls. Sales or use tax on gifts differs by state, and some states have their own gift affidavit; check with your state DMV before you go.
